

Abstract

A method to determine and monitor concentrations of inert metal plating components in metal plating baths. An inert indicator is included in the bath composition and the concentration of the inert indicator is monitored during plating. The change in the concentration of the inert indicator is used to determine the change in the concentration of inert bath components.